A fault which humbles a man is of more use to him than a good action which puffs him up.

-Thomas Wilson

You count. You make a difference. You can add to the sum of beauty and joy and love and understanding in the world (for yourself, your family, your friends, your community, however you define it), or you can subtract from those already scarce enough commodities. What you do matters.

-Vincent Barnett

If you face squarely into the sunlight, and gaze squarely toward the future, you will find that both your shadow and your failures have fallen behind you.

Special Olympics

Steve Swam

The last two years, several members of the Lineboro-Manchester Lions Club have volunteered at the Carroll County Special Olympics Spring Games (Track & Field). The 2011 Games will be held again this year at Westminster High School on Wednesday, April 27. Eligible athletes are all children and adults, at least eight-years-old, with intellectual disabilities, a cognitive delay, or a closely related developmental disability. Eligible athletes have functional limitations in both general learning and in adaptive skills. This typically includes all individuals with intellectual disabilities, combination deaf-blindness, autism, traumatic head injuries, and most individuals with cerebral palsy and specific learning disabilities.

As in the past, there will be many various events in which athletes can compete: 50 meter dash, standing long jump, softball throw, running long jump and many more! Volunteers are needed to help judge, get ribbons ready for presentation, handout brown bag lunches, etc. If you have never volunteered with Special Olympics, it is a very rewarding experience. See Lion Steve if you are interested in helping with this year's Spring Games. Remember the Lions Motto "We Serve".

BUILDING BETTER COMMUNITIES

by Dave Whitney

My mother died when I was born.

I was fortunate to be brought up during my early years by a grandfather and grandmother who placed community above self in their daily lives.

It is a lesson that has stood me well in my so-called Golden Years, one that has held the boredom at bay . . .

My grandfather taught that we should always leave any community in which we live and serve in better shape that it was when we joined it.

For many years as a journalist this was simply a matter of exposing those who would steal the trust and money of the communities they were supposedly serving. To maintain the integrity to perform that job successfully I remained detached from the many organizations that served the communities in which I lived.

For two-thirds of my life I lived this rather remote but very rewarding existence.

Eventually, as I founded some publications of my own, I found that involvement in the communities they served was a necessary part of doing business.

At first it was with some trepidation that I began joining some of the various community and civic organizations within the areas served by my newspapers and magazines.

It drew me out of myself if nothing else. And it turned out to be a rewarding experience not to mention a great opportunity to learn about both self and others.

They say there are three Ws we can employ as individuals in helping to build better communities – Work, Wisdom and Wealth. I have participated in all three. I have generally tithed regular of my earnings to the various needs in the communities in which I have lived and served. I have contributed my knowledge of economics and business to organizations to which I have belonged by serving in whatever official capacity within each organization I could best fill a need. And I have put in the hours needed to support those organizations, often in the kitchen stirring a pot of gravy or the backyard picking up trash.

From all of this I have drawn a comfortable feeling of satisfaction and I continue to do so.

If there is a dark spot in this somewhat glowing thread it is that in almost every organization that I spend time these days there is always a constant call for more members and more money as memberships decline and costs of operations constantly increase.

What has happened over the past half century? Have we become more callous toward the needs of others within the communities in which we live and serve?

Maybe so, but whose fault is it?

I contend that it is our fault. We have forgotten to teach that service to our communities is a valuable part of keeping those communities alive and well.

There seems to be a constant shortage these days of people who are willing to give. Maybe it is the constantly accelerating pace of life that prevents many from getting involved in things outside themselves and maybe it is that there are too many things competing for their time to allow them to consider doing for others within their communities.

Whatever the reason the fact remains that the rewards of community service far outweigh the personal costs.

If you're finding you . . . have reached a so-so level, you might want to consider getting back in the game of life by joining one or more of the various civic and community organizations around you and becoming an active participant in its programs.

I'm most grateful for those early lessons taught me by my grandparents, who taught by example, and most grateful for the fact that somehow they stuck and I found my way back to them over the years.

Will you help to make today more pleasant for someone, or more miserable? If the former, your day, too, will be more pleasant; if the latter, it, too, will be miserable.

LOVING EACH DAY

You can feel happy simply because you experience happiness in your nature. Real, lasting happiness does not come at the detriment of others or through againstness or denial of reality. You can learn to be happy and not in conflict with others or situations, regardless of what is going on.

Others may not agree with your happiness. They may think that you are responding inappropriately. Clearly, there is too much pain, suffering, and misery in the world, so there is no need to add to it. If your happiness is misunderstood or judged by others, you can turn it to peace, understanding, and compassion by choosing to be happy regardless.
